

FOR RELEASE JULY 2, 2008

Former radio announcer Mark Lonsinger has announced today the creation of a new website dedicated to Holmes County.

The voiceofholmescounty.com is now on-line and will be a new media offering for Holmes County residents. Lonsinger said the site intends to feature play-by-play high school sports coverage and various other features, interviews and community events.

“The internet, and all the possibilities it offers, is an exciting way of offering media coverage to Holmes County,” Lonsinger commented. “We are very much looking forward to exploring all the avenues and discovering all the ways it can be interactive and informative to the county’s residents.”

Lonsinger added, “The web is rapidly becoming, more and more, a part of everyday life. People have started turning to the internet for everything from information to banking, and we feel there are applications locally that are yet unexplored. We intend to see what all it can offer in this vein and have fun doing so.”

“While high school sports will certainly be front and center on our website, it will only be a part of the equation,” Lonsinger explained. “We intend to have something for everyone on topics across the board and look forward to developing and adding new things all along the way.”

Lonsinger has posted a video message on the developing website to explain the concept and share other information with visitors to the site.

“Rome wasn’t built in a day and this website won’t be either. It will be a work in progress that will be evolving over the course of time. This is not the end but merely the beginning,” Lonsinger said. “This is not the finished product. It is the launch.”

Lonsinger has nearly 34 years experience in newspapers and radio, the last 16½ years of which has been spent working in Holmes County.

“I’m excited and thrilled to be a part of this new venture and want to help build it into something really special, unique and different for the people of Holmes County. I look forward to their continued support and help in making thevoiceofholmescounty.com all it can possibly be.”
